

Is Overnight Sitting Right for My Pet?

Choosing the right type of care is one of the most important decisions you will make for your pet. Some pets thrive with a sitter who stays in the home, while others do well with boarding or simple drop in visits. Overnight pet sitting can be the perfect fit when your pet needs more consistency, companionship, and a calmer environment.

Overnight pet sitting may be right for you if:

1. Your pet feels most comfortable staying in their own home. Staying at home can reduce anxiety and help them feel safe and at ease.
2. Your pet would benefit from having a sitter dedicated to their needs throughout the night and day.
3. Your pet needs more frequent potty breaks or has medical routines.
4. Your pet struggles with boarding or unfamiliar environments.
5. Your pet needs stability while you are away.
6. Your home also needs extra care while you travel, such as plant care, bringing in mail, or rotating lights.
7. Your pet does best with consistent caregivers instead of a rotating staff.

Choosing the Right Package for Your Pet

1. Consider your pet's daily routine.

Does your pet nap most of the day? Follow a strict feeding schedule? Need multiple walks or enrichment? Choose a package that mirrors their normal day.

2. Evaluate how much daytime companionship they need.

Independent pets may do well with lighter daytime coverage, while anxious or bored pets may need more frequent visits.

3. Think about their medical or special care needs.

Pets with mobility issues, medications, anxiety, or health conditions often benefit from more attentive packages.

4. Consider their energy level.

High energy dogs may need structured activity; seniors or low energy pets may prefer a lighter schedule.

5. Match the package to your pet's personality.

Independent pets may need fewer visits, while active, anxious, or elderly pets benefit from more sitter presence.
